3. Read the passage and write the answer of the questions given under it.

The defect of our civilization is that it does not know what to do with its knowledge. Science has given us powers fit for gods, yet we use them like small children. We do not know how to manage our machines. Machines were meant to be man's servants; yet has grown to be dependent on them that they are in a fair way to become his master. Already most men spend most of their lives looking after and waiting upon machines. The machines are very stern masters. They must be fed with coal, and given petrol to drink and oil to wash with they must be kept at the right temperature. If they do not get their meal when they expect them, they grow sulky and refuse to work or burst with rage and blow up. So we have to wait upon them very attentively and do all that we can do to keep them in good temper. We find it difficult to do work or play without machines and a time may come when they will rule us just as we rule animals.
